

ABOUT THE LCP

The Latino Comedy Project (LCP) is a popular, award-winning sketch comedy troupe whose unique brand of fast-paced multicultural satire strikes a chord with both Latino and mainstream audiences alike!

Of the LCP's debut performance, "The Austin Chronicle" wrote: "The Latino Comedy Project is funny, hysterical enough that you leave the performance with a gut aching from deep belly laughs...Snappy writing, immaculate timing, and an animated cast. It's almost enough to restore your faith in the concept of sketch comedy."

"The Austin-American Statesman" writes: "At times witty and clever, at times absurd and slapstick, the LCP produces an original mix of ribald and intelligent comedy. With perfect timing, sharp writing, and a whopping dose of animated goofiness, the LCP proves that biting original sketch comedy is alive and well and Latin!"

"The San Francisco Chronicle" called the LCP "hilarious" and "murderously funny."

As a seasoned touring troupe, the LCP has performed with Carlos Mencia, Fred Willard, Gabriel Iglesias, Pablo Francisco and Rob Corddry of "The Daily Show," among others. They've performed at colleges across the nation, and have been featured at the Big Stinkin' International Comedy Festival, The Latino Laugh Fest and nationally renowned Sketch Fests in Seattle, San Francisco, Chicago, and Canada.

The LCP's immigration-themed spoof of the film "300" became a breakout viral video hit on YouTube.com, where it has since amassed over 4.7 million views. To date, the LCP's YouTube videos have received over seven million views worldwide. The LCP cast also co-wrote and were featured in an MTV3 comedy ad campaign, which has been nominated for a 2009 Emmy Award. The LCP is currently in pre-production for a network sketch comedy pilot for production in 2009.

They're bad. They're brown. They're the Latino Comedy Project!
